

Concerning paragraph 45 of FCC 04-129, I am concerned about coverage of LPFM stations. In areas of the country such as I live in, translator stations often cover larger areas than would be covered by a LPFM station. Translators, even those for non-profit organizations, are used to provide service in a cost-effective way to areas not easily served by other stations. An LPFM station would be a "cherry-picker", but not serve the areas at the edges of the area of a more powerful translator station. I would ask the FCC to consider placing the burden of proof on a LPFM station applicant, that they show that the whole area be better served by their limited reach.